Prague the Spring Festival by Lek Boonlert

Article published on November 28th 2011 | Travel Tips

Otherwise known as the Prague Spring International Music Festival, every hotel in Prague is filled to the brim with enthusiasts from around the world who are here to see the various shows, artists, orchestras and chamber music ensembles gathered here. Every accommodation in Prague will be reverberating with the symphonies being played, and no matter which hotel in Prague you choose you will be within walking distance of one of the venues. Performances during the Prague Spring Festival take place at theatres throughout the city, although if your accommodation in Prague is close to the Prague State Opera, the Estates Theatre, the Rudolfinum, the Municipal House or the National Theatre, you will have even closer access and are in for the experience of a lifetime.

The opera houses in Prague are considered to be some of the finest in Europe and offer a variety of performances throughout the year, to keep visitors and locals alike completely content in terms of artistry. No hotel in Prague will remain empty during the Spring Festival, because this is the one time of year when activities transform from the standard and evolve into something much, much more powerful. Ever since it was first established after World War II, the Prague Spring International Music Festival is one of the leading festivals for classical and chamber music around the world, with orchestral performances and some of the best international performing artists. If music and opera are of interest, then this is definitely an experience you will not want to miss.
