Swansea Restaurants by Lek Boonlert

Article published on November 29th 2011 | Travel Tips

Swansea might not be one of the worldâ€™s biggest cities but it certainly offers food from all over the world. Swansea hotels may not offer the most interesting of fare but travel a little further afield and youâ€™ll find Welsh, Chinese, Thai and even typically American food. Luckily Swanseaâ€™s restaurants offer a wide enough a range to suit everyoneâ€™s budget so there is no excuse for spending the night eating standard hotel fare.

The city centre of Swansea has more than a hundred quality restaurants. These restaurants are located on Wind Street, where you will find theme bars and international cuisine. Go to High Street and Princess Way for quality Chinese food, and find excellent vegetarian food on Cradock Street.

For the absolute best in budget eating visitors are recommended to give Charlieâ€™s Chowder a try. Situated on Prospect Place on Swanseaâ€™s Marina this restaurant is open until late and dishes up New England food at great prices. The Espresso Bar, opposite the railway station, is great for traditional British food as well as made to order sandwiches and baguettes. The Oriental Garden on Victoria Quay serves a rotation of Asian dishes depending on the night you visit.

The Grape & Olive is a good mid-priced restaurant that is located in the tallest building in Wales, offering good food with a wonderful view of central Swansea and the bay. Splurging eaters will enjoy Langlandâ€™s Brassiere on Brunfield Road, a modern incarnation of the classic British restaurant, which features a great view over Langland Bay. Slice is also recommended by locals who enjoy the locally sourced produce and ingredients that vary with the seasons.
